Ejlal Alkhuzaie: Recommended by one of my friend , as similar to book of men from mars and woman from Venus.

In my point view is the following it's how to fall in love in smart way , how don't let your age train run without some.

I think is little bit different than men from mars and woman from Venus , because is discussion on that book how men think , and woman think , and how woman and man can communicate with each other without having problem.

This issue don't only apply on wife and husband but over college , friends , ...etc.

Love smart is different type of book in my point of you is how to date , and how to get love of your live , I am still reading the book but still didn't completed.

Marwa Ayad: This was an OK read. I couldn't help noticing the similarity between some of the things Dr. Phil mentioned and some of the things Dr. Barbara De Angelis mentioned in her book "Are you the one for me?" (which I highly recommend by the way) which was published in the 90's. Also, Love Smart reminded me of "Why Men Love Bitches" (published in 2002), at least in parts. The book didn't feel original; I felt like I'd read it before (and I hadn't). There's really no wonderful advice and Dr. Phil mostly focuses on the fact that women must develop their self-esteem. He makes you come up with several lists (the best part about the book) involving you and the one you dream of...etc. Also the 80/20 rule part was good.

I'd say this book is good for those who want to settle down and want to start somewhere. It's not really of benefit to anyone in a relationship.

I prefer books with more depth and insight into human nature; this was a rather "superficial" read (if you know what I mean).

Jen: After I learn this I made a listing (like it indicates within the book) approximately what i wished in a lifelong partner. i began relationship David almost immediately thereafter and discovered that he had greater than the recommended 80% of characteristics that i used to be searching for in a mate. We acquired engaged eight months later.
